Pam Brewer

“Through my work I invite the viewer to remember the organic nature from which we were born...that of truth, love and connection. It is my premise that we have lost our way. We have lost connection with our true nature. We have deep memories of ourselves as members of the natural world, working and functioning as one. There was a time when we communicated and connected. We spoke without words. We were truly a part of nature. The natural kingdom works and aligns with and without conflict as a magnificent orchestra. It is magnificent, pure and honest, beyond measure. My work speaks to the possibility of remembering the essence of ourselves rejoined with our true nature. To connect with the animal and plant kingdom we must remember the abilities we have lost, the ability to communicate from heart to heart, from essence to essence, from truth to truth. It is my intention through this work, to reconcile the separation of human from nature and the joy found in its reconnection.” - Pam Brewer

Pam graduated from the Arts Institute of Atlanta with a degree in Interior Design. She now lives and works in Newland, North Carolina.
